Do you have what it takes to become a great life coach? Take this test!

1) Basic Catching T-ball Drills

Learning to catch the ball is the most fundamental training drill to be skilled in baseball. This is highly noted, even in major leagues warm up sessions before a game. Catch is a fun for children learning to play t-ball. It involves catching and throwing, which forms the essentials of this sport.

2) Bucket Bouncing

Another fun t-ball drill is bouncing the ball in a bucket. A large basket or any wide open container could be placed at the base location. Outfielders are positioned to throw and bounce the ball correctly to get into the open basket or container. Younger players could start with a shorter distance before proceeding to longer lengths.

This could be a fun drill as a competition with allocated points to every successful entry. This practice is vital to the score of the game where players learn to aim for the base from the outfield.

3) Catching Games

As catching is an important t-ball drill to strengthen the basics of skills in the player, creative catching games could be designed to hone in catching and throwing skills. Players could partner up to practice throwing and catching the ball between them.

Catching the coach is a fun training drill with the coach running from the home plate to the first base. The player with the baseball is to tag the coach before he reaches first base. Catching players is another form of fun drill in this sport to practice base running. Players are to run from the consecutively with a few seconds difference before the coach runs out to catch and tag.
